Hej, my wonderful Bookworm!

Last week I participated in the

Canadian Creative Industries Virtual Trade Mission to Germany

with inspiring plenary sessions, insightful discussions and targeted 1:1 zoom meetings.

When I asked about the #1 frustration in going global in book publishing, SO many told me about the strange and very common phenomenon that happens the moment you sit down to start something you've never done before...

It sounds like this:

#1 "I want to create a profitable foreign right licensing business for my publishing house but I know myself well enough to hesitate before jumping in and asking do I really have the bandwidth to take this on?"

#2 "I'd love getting my foot in the door with publishers in other countries but get stuck and stare at the screen without a single coherent thought coming to mind, where to begin."

#3 "I'm looking to develop a robust domestic and foreign rights licensing program but don't know how to do it."

#4 "I want to expand my publishing business, get more publicity, promote my authors and books in Europe and beyond and increase sales but my time, budget and resources are limited and I feel overwhelmed — it's SO frustrating."

You're so not alone,

if your brain feels paralyzed the moment you sit down to plan to successfully go global with your creative business, your mind goes blank and fear kicks in.

This is totally normal — and 100% fixable.

Here are five resources to help you dissolve your mental block and instantly turn on your creative flow and get started:

But here's the deal, my lovely Bookworm.

I'm only sharing these super-valuable tips for FREE if you promise me one thing...

Next time you sit down to REALLY get started (or if you must pivot or re-invent your business) to overshooting your goals in global book publishing or a related creative industry (may it be a stronger online presence, a foreign rights licensing business kick or a recreational spa for your overall business strategy), you won't bang your head into the keyboard, or just quit and walk away.

Instead?

Store this E-Mail and download these resources so you can come back and use this material when you need it most.

Deal? Excellent, my lovely Bookworm. More next week.

Sending big love  your way,
xoxo Claudia
